Henry Stimson Labored For Peace of His Fellow Men

By Drew Pearson

(Copyright, 1950, By The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

EN ROUTE, ON WEST COAST, Oct. 25 -I do not know what his family will have written on the gravestone of Henry L. Stimson, who died last week, but I do know what I would write. I would write: "Here lies a man who, when all others gave up hope, labored for the peace of his fellow men."

Henry L. Stimson was secretary of state in the Hoover administration when I was a young newspaperman covering the state department At first a critic, I grew to respect and love him and to consider him a great man.

As I look back on it I am ashamed of the way I sometimes heckled Mr. Stimson. Bill Flythe of the I.N.S. and Lyle Wilson of the U. P. and I used to think up all sorts of embarrassing questions to ask him at press conferences. And once I induced the late Fiorello La Guardia, then a member of congress, to tack an amendment on the war department appropriations bill whereby no money could be spent for Stimson's military aide. A secretary of state, entrusted with keeping the peace, did not need a military aide. The House of Representatives voted it - though the Senate reversed the House and restored the appropria-

Looking back on it, and considering the great things Stimson did for peace, he was entitled to the extravagance of a military aide - if it tickled his vanity.

Strove Hard For Peace

Mr. Stimson was a queer mixture. He was secretary of war in two cabinets - Taft's and FDR's. He believed in and fought for a sound military establishment. Yet the real mark he left on history was through his untiring, unrelenting, never-ending efforts for peace.

Almost unaided he staged a four-year struggle to rectify the injustices of the Versailles treaty and stave off the forces which he saw all too clearly were hurtling the world toward

An age was dying - an age of international optimism, of disarmament drives and good will, the aftermath of the war to end war. An age was dving and Henry L. Stimson, sensing the impending tragedy, struggled almost alone to give it renewed life. Stimson became secretary of state just after Frank B. Kellogg had negotiated the Kellogg-Briand pact to outlaw war. That pact had no teeth and no supporting machinery, and Stimson, sincerely believing in what Kellogg had written, strove to make it work. Realizing the setback that Republican isolationists had given the world when they vetoed the League of Nations, he tried to atone for their mistake.

It was an uphill battle. For his chief in the White House, Herbert Hoover, disagreed with him. So did most of the GOP hierarchy. So did many of the diplomats around him in the state department Ahead of His Time

But Stimson saw much farther ahead than they. When the Japanese war lords struck in Manchuria in September, 1931, he saw ahead to Pearl Harbor; and perhaps also to present-day Korea. He knew that the minor skirmish on the tracks of the South Manchurian railroad 19 years ago actually was the beginning of a giant military grab for all of Asia.

So Stimson tried to breathe new life into the League of Nations, tried to enforce the nine-power pact guaranteeing the sovereignty of China. Finally he went to Europe, rented a villa on Lak Geneva and called in all the chancellors of Europe to urge that aggression in this faraway corner of Asia was a greater threat to peace than the petty squabbles of

The premiers of Europe listened carefully.

But Manchuria was too far off. Those were dark days in Stimson's villa beside Lake Geneva. His room looked out on an old garden, sheltered by high trees in which roosted flocks of birds. And sometimes, when he could not sleep and work dragged endlessly, Stimson looked out among the poplars, saw again that line of men from the fields, the factories, the sea, going forward; and the line of women, wounded men, exhausted men, going

A panorama of his life lay before him, the the latter years having been given to rebuilding equity and understanding among the peoples of the world. And he had failed.

Yet he had not failed. Few men who are in advance of their time live to see the things they strive for finally come to pass. But before he died last week Stimson saw his greatest dream fulfilled.

Set Pace For World to Follow

I was with him in London during the naval conference when he strove to put across a "consultative pact." The pact merely pledged the United States to "consult" in case war threatened, with no obligation to use troops or even diplomatic pressure. Yet a nervous Herbert Hoover in the White House turned it

Before he died, however, Henry L. Stimson saw his government consult with the United Nations over one brief week end and pass a historic resolution creating an international army to block aggression in Korea. Furthermore, this historic action was taken and say, "Phooey on panic."

in the same contagious corner of the world -

Manchuria - where, 19 years earlier, Stimson had tried to stop war, warning that it was the beginning of a great power grab for Asia.

No, Henry Stimson did not fail. He merely set the pace for the world to follow. Shortly before Stimson died, my brother Leon phoned him, suggesting that he make a recording of his criticism of Senator McCarthy.

Courteously, Stimson declined. "I am not well," he said. "I am making a great effort to keep going. I've come to where I can't do that sort of thing any more. I've got to take care of myself very closely. I have bad arthritis and am on crutches most of the

His voice was fairly firm as he said this. Then, almost with a chuckle, he added: "Are you Drew Pearson's brother? Well, give him my regards. He used to make me sweat, sometimes."

Thus Henry Stimson, physically crippled, but serene in the knowledge that he had pioneered peace for his fellow men, quietly passed away.

Perpetrators of Korean Atrocities Escape while UN and Army Haggle

By Edward Linehan

"Atrocity" is fast becoming an every-day word in the average person's wartime vocabulary. Just like "bazooka," "jet," "A-bomb," or "radar." We seem too willing to accept a hideous crime as an inevitable consequence of An atrocity report, at one time, produced a feeling of genuine shock. But nowadays even its propaganda value is wearing thin. We tend to cluck our tongues disapprovingly and forget about it. And that appears to be the direction of things in Korea.

The latest estimates of atrocities in the Korean war run as high as 25,000. It means that as many as 25,000 South Korean civilians and American G.I.'s have been brutally butchered as they lay helplessly wounded or bound. Although voluminous evidence has been gathered to prove that these savage acts have taken place, there seems to have been little or, no effort to locate and identify the guilty parties.

The Army appears to have taken the view that it is the job of the United Nations to gather evidence against specific war criminals. The UN. conversely, seems to think that the Army should handle it.

It is obvious that unless evidence against specific individuals is obtained, no punitive action will be taken. Denunciatory speeches point out our abhorrence of this needless cruelty in wartime, but do little to stop it. Only conviction and punishment of individual war criminals can discourage this sort of wanton murder in the future.

Evidence against war criminals disappears quickly. Investigators for the Nurnberg trials discovered that witnesses forget, or become hard to find. Documents disappear or are Much time already has been lost in Korea and every day that the U.S. Army and the United Nations haggle over who is responsible for gathering that evidence, another wanton war savage may get off the hook.

The responsibility for chasing down facts that will lead a war criminal to prison or the gallows logically would appear to fall to the UN. The independent nature of that world body lends itself to ferreting out information impartially, and data so gathered would be all the more damning for its lack of bias. The Army, while it undoubtedly could prove useful, is better geared for searching out material of a more military nature.

But whichever agency falls heir to the job, it's time it was started. A precedent of fixing the guilt for war crimes on individuals was established at the Nurnberg and Tokyo trials. United Nations observers and U. S. Army experts are on the scene. There is no reason for further delay.

'War Jitters' Is a Disease That Can't Be Quarantined

By Richard Kleiner

It has happened several times lately. The most recent was in Brooklyn, when an explosion in the sewer system sent manhole covers blowing into the street.

The manhole covers weren't the only things to blow their tops. Brooklynites, possibly still jittery over what happened to the Dodgers in the National League, blew theirs, too. For a few frantic minutes, there were screams of "It's War," and "The Russians are bombing us."

It's a natural reaction to these feverish times. War threats and war budgets are constantly in the news. Anybody who isn't a little jittery is pretty phlegmatic.

Maybe "war jitters" is simply a disease of 1950, just as apple vendors were a disease of

But it's a disease that is very unhealthful. It's very contagious: you can't simply quarantine it. And there doesn't seem to be any treatment that works on all the cases.

The best remedy appears to be plenty of sleep, lots of good food and strong faith that the strength and intelligence of America should be able to ward off a big shooting war.

Having the jitters is one thing, but letting them explode into panic is something worse. Some people, like those squeamish Brooklynites, see an armed Russian in every dark alley and an H-bomb falling from every cloud.

To ward off this panic takes more than sleep, food and faith. It takes knowledge and cold, practical logic-the kind of logic and knowledge that makes the experts say a full-scale war is still far off.

You know that America is once more building up its muscle. You know that Russia is still battling back from a severely-damaged economy. You know that the Russian-backed North Koreans took a pasting when they expected Knowing those things should be a comfort. Practically, it means that Russia is not in a good position to start a war. And, despite their erratic streak, the Russians are practical when it comes to war.

Have your jitters, if you must. But there's no point in panie at this point.

Next time somebody pops a paper bag, or a sewer manhole makes like a rocket, don't dive for the nearest bomb shelter. Just relax, smile

We continue our suggestions for old age: 5. Don't try to tie your children to you too closely-give them rope. The children must have sufficient room to grow on their own. Say to them: "Never in the way, never out of the way." The Bible says: "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother . . . and they twain shall be one flesh." This recognizes the necessity of young people leaving father and mother in order to grow on their own. Don't interfere. Remember, you wanted liberty to make mistakes when you began on your own.

BUT THIS Time

I THANK YOU

6. Surrender to God your loved ones who have died. Do not mourn over them in useless regret. A mother monkey will often carry around with it the decaying corpse of a dead baby. Such grief is pitiful and dangerous and useless, but not more so than that of a human mother who refuses to surrender the loved ones who have passed on. One such mother, years after her baby had died, had enough milk in her breasts for twinsand doctors treating her physically could not stop the lactation. An understanding friend saw what was happening: the mother had never inwardly surrendered her child; it was still at her breast, as it were. She surrendered it into the hands of God, relaxed, and the lactation stopped. The mother was released.

Many older people spoil their lives by useless mourning over departed loved ones. I know an intelligent woman who is making her life, and the lives of those around her, miserable by her useless mourning. She thinks it is showing loyalty to her husband, but really it is a species of self-pity.

Develop the mind clear up to the end and keep fit for tasks here and hereafter. They tell us that the mind never grows old. The brain, the instrument of the mind, does grow old; but the mind can keep the brain fresh and alert if the mind doesn't let down and sag. Compel yourself to read some portion of a good book each day. Above all, fill your mind with the Book. Then you will never be empty or alone.

Gracious Father, help me to grow old gracefully and beautifully, to come to maturity majestically. Let me fill my mind and soul with Thee, so that when physical beauty fades, spiritual beauty may take its place. Physical beauty is an endowment; spiritual beauty an achievement-help me to achieve it by constant companionship with Thee. Amen.

Tax Increase Despite The Korea Victory

Defense Measures Are Important And That Costs Money

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25-(A)-Senator George (D-Ga), a top congressional manager of tax legislation, put the nation on notice Tuesday to expect further multibillion dollar increases in taxes, notwithstanding the victory in Korea.

Costs Money "The success in Korea," George told newsmen, "does not remove the necessity for additional taxes. We cannot afford not to go ahead and that costs money." Some lawmakers feel there is not much likelihood of another general increase in normal individual taxes, unless the world

WHERE GRAPES OF WRATH ARE STORED - An officer blocks the doorway as angry landlords try to force their way into rent control offices in Los Angeles, Calif., to protest the government's failure to lift the city's rent controls. The sign carried by man at right denounces Federal Housing Expediter Tighe Woods as a "commissar"; and says "goodby Helen and Jimmy," meaning Helen Douglas and James Roosevelt, Democratic candidates for senator and governor, respectively. More than 300 landlords singing "Glory, Glory Halelujah," took part in the near riot.
